Grace lived with her ma and her nana and a cat called Paw-Paw. Next to her family, what Grace liked best was stories. Some she knew and some she made up. She was particularly interested in ones about fathers—because she didn't have one.

"You do too have a father," her ma said when she caught Grace talking that way. "I must have told you a hundred times about how we split up, and your papa went back to Africa. He has another family now, but he's still your father, even though he doesn't live with us anymore."
